A CENTURY OF PROGRESS

CHICAGO WORLD'S FAIR

FROM a small hamlet of a few homes clustered about Fort Dearborn, at what is now the site of the London Guarantee & Accident Company Building, to America's second largest city, marks the progress of Chicago during the last century.

Chicago, great central market, city of industries, and financial metropolis of the Middle West, is known as a city of great institutions of learning and culture, of civic enterprises, which make for worth while achievements, quite as much as a city whose accomplishments primarily are commercial.

Chicago invites you to visit her during the 1933 Century of Progress. In the Exposition grounds, which are located only a few hundred yards from the heart of Downtown Chicago, on the shores of Lake Michigan, will be found mammoth exposition buildings, some of which are illustrated in this folder. There is the Administration Building, the Travel and Transportation Building, the Court of States Building, the Electrical Group, the Hall of Science, a replica of Fort Dearborn, and there will be many individual exhibit buildings by some of the nation's largest organizations, such as General Motors, DuPont, Chrysler, Sears Roebuck, and many others.

Immediately north of the Exposition grounds is Grant Park—Chicago's front yard. Here are many permanent and interesting exhibits, which alone are worth a trip of many miles to see, such as the Field Museum which houses exhibits of every description, the Shedd Aquarium with its many kinds of fish life, the Adler Planetarium—the most interesting of its kind in America, the Art Institute known the world over, Soldiers' Field where athletic events of all kinds are held and which will seat 100,000 people. There is the Buckingham Fountain, beautifully and colorfully illuminated at night, the Lincoln statue, the John A. Logan statue, and at the south of the Exposition grounds the statue of that famous statesman, Stephen A. Douglas.

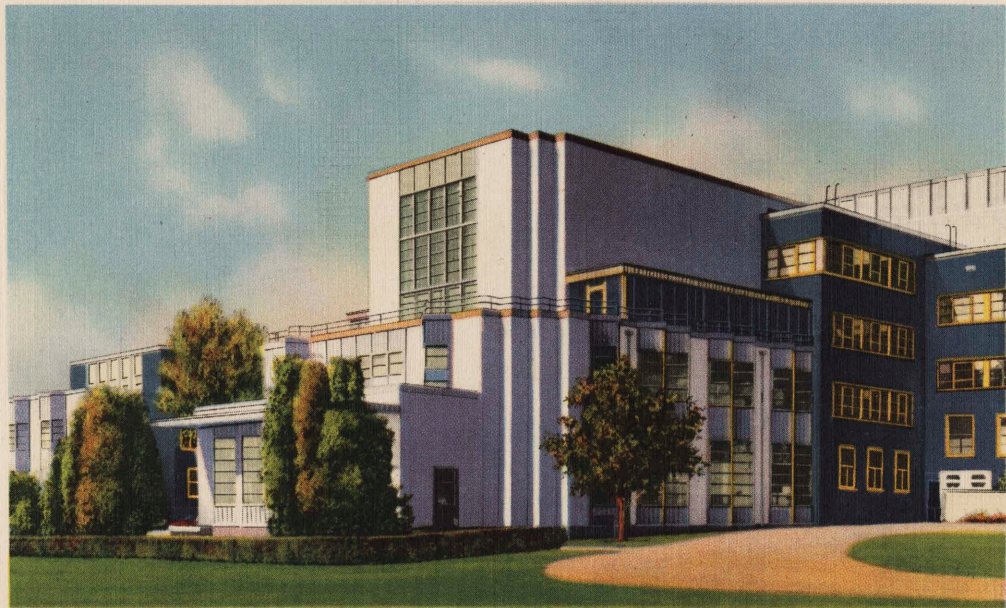

There are so many other things to see in Chicago that a visitor will want to linger long here. The beautiful parks, miles and miles of boulevards, the famous Zoo in Lincoln Park, the largest conservatory in Garfield Park, a similar one in Washington Park, and the famous Midway which leads past the University of Chicago with its many wonderful buildings to the scene of Chicago's last World's Fair in Jackson Park.

You will want to see the Packingtown which is the largest of the city's industries. You will want to visit the Gold Coast. You will want to visit Chinatown. You will want to spend a day or two in some of the many beautiful forest preserves which are conveniently located on the outskirts of the city. There are theatres, baseball parks, golf courses—many of them, so that visitors to Chicago's Century of Progress will find recreation of every sort.
