The first part of the manuscript is written in a cursive hand, likely from the 15th or 16th century. The text is arranged in several columns, with some lines being significantly longer than others. The ink is dark, and the paper shows signs of age, including some staining and a small tear near the bottom center.

The word "Goydard" is written in a larger, more decorative script, possibly a signature or a title, and is positioned in the middle of the page.
