Dear Sir - I am sending for your consideration an article entitled "The Second Compiy

of the ideals in which I have ventured to hope will have your sympathy and make it a suitable publication for your review.

Yours sincerely

Dear Mr. Bunting

I have written an article which I think you can publish in the Contemporary Review. It is a companion between the Union of Scotland and Ireland entering somewhat fully into the constitutional relations of the two countries to England, with a view to the discussion which will take place on the Government proposal.
I think it will fill about 22 pages of your review. I could cut it down a little in the woods.

with my best,

Dear Mr. Bartley,

I ought sooner to have written to you to say that the letter my return from Mentone I found a letter returned from the dead letter office which I had written to assure you that you sent me some weeks ago. In that letter I said that I would bear in mind your wish that I should write an article on your Reserve I hope to be able to do so before long. I am... however engaged on my farm articles elsewhere.

I feel very much hope out of the change of this moment especially as the policy I have been advocating is now adopted. Some of the new Cabinet are very recent converts.

Yours truly,

I will venture over what you say about an Article in the subject of the Taxation of Grand Rents.

I rather fear that it does not afford sufficient material in a Magazine Article but would be more appropriate in a letter to the Times or a speech.
I will however write to you later about it when I have thought more on it.

To the Editor of the "Contemporary Review."

Sir,

In the course of a conversation which I recently had with Mr. James Bryce, M.P., on the subject of the "Institute des Sciences Politiques" of Paris, where I have been for two years, he manifested a great interest in the details which I brought before him in the object of the school and in the results which have been obtained. He advised me to write an article with the view of bringing... this undertaking before the notice of the English public & he agreed on giving it in favor of familiarising the public with the idea of organising a similar institution in the country.

The bare means of suggesting such a course is obviously to them what has been attempted abroad of the success which has attended the effort. Therefore I have therefore written the enclosed article which I now venture to submit to you, after having communicated it beforehand to Mr. Boyce in order to obtain the benefit of his suggestions in relating these to.
Dear Sir Very,

I knew the late Professor pretty well, and should like to be of assistance to Mrs Collins. But the subject of theatrical organization is no easy one, and I am not sure that I have kept abreast of quite recent research. Moreover, I am at the moment very busy with pressing affairs both public and private. I fear I could do nothing till the middle of May. Then I certainly would make some sort of report. But until I read the paper I could not anticipate my views.

Yours very truly,

Sidney Lee.

Dear Montmorency,

I am preparing a paper on 'Shakespeare’s attitude to Politics' which I should be very glad to contribute to the 'Contemporary Review' as I have already told you. I think with a little pressure I could get it ready for the June number if you could allow me a pretty late date for delivery of the article. I should like to know the latest date you could fix.

Incidentally, I shall be answering some of the foolish talk about Shakespeare in the House of Commons and elsewhere. I am afraid the paper will be rather long - perhaps twenty pages, if that be permitted.

I made some inquiries at the Athenaeum, and find to my regret that there is no appeal against the procedure followed. Of course I could put you down again. But we should be dealing with distant futures. However, in that regard I am in your hands.

Yours very truly,

Sidney Lee.

Dear Montmorency,

Many thanks for your letter. If you think two papers be not excessive, I should like to develop my material, which I think is ample for the purpose, into two articles under the general heading of "Shakespeare and Public Affairs." I will let you have the first part I hope before the end of this month, and the second part a week or two later. I shall try to make each 12 pages.

With many thanks,

Yours very truly,

Sidney Lee.
Dear Montmorency,

The situation is rather awkward.

You wrote on 30 April, 13 pages is the absolute limit for a single article. If you can get into that length, it will solve the problem. But if not, we shall have to split the article into two successive numbers. I intended the two articles to be twelve pages each, which I took to be in agreement with your suggestion. However, I do not wish to raise any difficulties than can possibly be avoided. I propose to make this article stop with the close of Section VI. Your remarks can readily get so much into 10 pages. Section VII will then form part of the second article, and I will add from my Vast materials, which are quite ready, to make up another 10 pages. I reckoned each of your pages to contain 500 words, so that in my calculation each article ought to run to 6000 words. I will let you have the article corrected for press tomorrow on the lines I here indicate, unless anything else occurs to you.

Yours very truly,

Sidney Lee
Dear Montmorency,

I was the second part of my paper on "Shakespeare and Public Affairs". It is a mere fragment of what I have prepared. But it is the result of a good deal of research with a view to clearing up a biographical puzzle. There are signs that my paper at Truro Hall on the general subject excited a good deal of attention, and an indication that these two papers are coming out in the "Contemporary" must possibly interest a few who do not ordinarily see the magazine.

Yours very truly,

Dear Mr. Brunet,

I am very sorry to hear in my friend's report that there has been so much trouble. The report for kind assistance has been good. Now that the sun is setting, I shall ascend the hill. I think it advisable to leave the town and go for a pleasant visit to Blackburn. The fine weather is perfect for such an excursion.

Yours,

My dear Sir,

I am very anxious to come to 22, Curzon Street, as soon as possible, in order to have the honour of seeing you and to have the pleasure of hearing some particulars of your proceeding in the Court of King's Bench. I shall call at your convenience and shall perhaps undertake to come down to London a week or two hence for the purpose of seeing you. I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

Dear Mr. Bunting,

I was afraid that I might be too long in replying to your letter of the 12th inst.; but I have been engaged in preparation for a lecture on Carlyle and his influence on the contemporary Press. I am enclosing a copy of a postcard from Mr. Keats, saying that the proofs were delayed. I hope this will not affect your arrangements for the immediate future. I should not be able to get here.

your Magazine to sketch a sketch of so pure a subject, but as I fancy the author of this little quibble I doubt it being put in so I offer it for your kind and gentle remembrance.

I do not wish to make any objection provided you will kindly allow me to appear in it as a lecturer without much to its credit as a Sunday evening lecture and without much of its true character. I shall do my best to give it its true character notwithstanding such small addition that I should dislike its being in it completely. I have just received the proof and hope to return it by tomorrow evening. I hope you will
Dear Sir Bunting

I owe you my thanks for your kind letter & for allowing me to visit London. Much will, indeed, to establish all right as far as I am concerned. I have been very busy and have not had the opportunity to do much.

I shall be in touch your kind offer of another article. I am afraid I cannot accept it as I do for some time. I am finding almost useless all this way of looking for opportunities in the London
I must try to get over this longer delay. It will prevent me from taking up other things for some time to come. I have a few new Spanish words from hospitality. I do not think it can be this year. I am very disappointed because I was expecting my expenses here to help me continue from now on for a travel.
Dear Sir,

I want to ask you if you can be so kind as to send the book I sent article in the new contemporary. I am afraid
I will think very regret to send it irregular on
