Dear Sir Percy Huting

I should like to write something on India for you, but I can't do it for January. I'm rather busy in a general way, and have promised an Indian article for the January

Church Quarterly
I will write again in a day or two, and hope then to make a definite suggestion as to time and subject. We shall have the good plan shortly, and as the Legis. Councils wear my special business I might have something to say of them.

Your very truly

I ceased to be Stow when I left India!

Sir Percy Harvington.
Dear Sir,

I am often a tempting subject. But it would take me a month, and I have not got a month.

There is a third view of this. I think the pathologists. I think his recent books are symptoms of senile decay. I will send Dr. Raleigh.
Dear Sir,

I am very busy. I have no time to write you outside or learn Meredith.

Very truly,

Dear Sir Percy,

First of all, let me congratulate you on your well-deserved honour. I have been asked to publish a number of my essays in book form; one, "The Bœqueuld Rap," appeared in the "Contemporary" for 1903. I think:

May I have permission to reprint it?

My dear Sir,

I haven't forgotten your kind offer that I should contribute an article. But besides my ordinary every-day work, I have had a succession of necessary literary articles to write, a manuscript to revise. All I can say is that I hope, some time, to send you an article. At present, it must stand over; many things must come first.

With kind regards,

Dear Miss Bunting,

I submit a M.S. by my daughter (who has been studying the subject in Paris as a Research subject) on "The Spirit of the Medieval Philosophy". The Scholastic Philosophy is just beginning to be studied again after long neglect and contempt. One of the two books which she quotes — absolutely indispensable work in three volumes — does not exist either in the Bollandian or the Cambridge University Library.
but Glasgow Univ. The homensia copy, the only one known to me in England or Scotland, got by E. Caird, who looked ahead in philosophy: perhaps the most Mrs. Fish has a copy. Still you must go to Paris or to Germany to study the subject. My daughter went into it as part of a study of Donne's poetry. prose, of which, she is engaged.

Dear Sir,

In accordance with your invitation I send MS of article on the sanctuary at Pisidian Antioch, in which we hope to make excavations that may present some interest in the future. At present it is useful to give the problems, the general situation and the direction of research.

Next year there may be an article to write on the early results. The MS. is to be a lecture in Oxford or the beginning of term.

Yrs faithfully,

Dear Sir,

On Jan 23 I have to give an inaugural lecture in Oxford, opening a new branch of study by a special appointment. I wrote to ask if you will be likely to publish the lecture. I did not write it unless I have a conditional promise — there can’t, course, be no absolute promise, as I may after all fail to do what I am appointed to do.

Dear Miss Buntip,

I wrote an article on the Mysteries, and St Paul: practically on LeRoy’s doctrine, “the mystery of Paul’s conversion is his conversion to the Mysteries.”

I had some recent discoveries bearing on the ritual. But Dr Hast-ump wants the article. I shd. have to modify it to suit the Expository Times. On the other hand it is too long.
for the Contemporary, as it was to 12 pages. I can not cut it down any further, though I have tried to do so.

If the Editors can make it at 12 pp., perhaps they would make up their mind at once; if not, send it back kindly.
