Washington March 12. 1855.

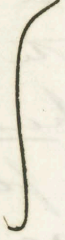

My Dear Clarke.

I was quite overwhelmed with letters and other things when your note of congratulation was received, and I had to let it pass together with all others passing by friends until a more convenient season. You appeared to be written to in a fragment. I suppose though that you are already on your way to Texas; if not actually there, I write only that you may know, if a letter can find you, that I am neither regretful nor ungrateful. Faithfully your friend
Wm. A. Seward.
