The general idea I had entertained of the distance from the Mouth of the Piscataqua to the Cape of Delaware was 1,000 Miles, but I have had no data to prove it. Therefore can neither confirm nor contradict this opinion.

The River Delaware at the Mouth can only be 50 Miles.

... I cannot undertake to say that the sounds of water here enumerated are navigable to their present state. The distances which are stated above are certainly much greater than those made on the same voyage. I doubt from my former knowledge of them, and probably the activity of the navigation may have produced this change. I feel every day surprises me.

... The city of New York to which he has much more than five Miles on the Delaware River.

... The Island from which he first shines takes is 40 Miles below the city...

... The streets are given up by the Bath as if there were in the city as before.

The Town, 102,000 Shells, Dec. 120, 000.Dalrymple, 12,000.

... In the Mississippi River I heard, could ascend the stream 18 Miles per day.

... Philadelphia has a charter for the sum of 100,000 to the difference of 400 Miles and as apply to Canada at New York it would.

... The Channel at Little Point is one of the best Sails in the Piscataqua...
