INTRODUCTORY NOTE

The Library of International Relations was established in the fall of 1932 as an open-shelf reference collection dealing with international affairs. The Library is primarily concerned with twentieth century events, with the foreign relations of the United States and other nations, with the history and causes of the World War and the official international bodies subsequently created.

Documents of the International Labor Office, of the Permanent Court of International Justice, and of the League of Nations are here available to the public. Foreign periodicals, most of them economic or financial in character, provide first-hand information on current conditions abroad. Recent critical works by outstanding authorities present the general political, economic and social aspects. For him who runs and reads there are the brief bi-weekly summaries from such research groups as the Foreign Policy Association and the Institute of Pacific Relations. In addition, there is an excellent pamphlet collection, a press clipping file, and the leading American periodicals in the international field.

A children's section was first started in the Spring of 1933 as the Story Cove at A Century of Progress. Political problems of statesmen may seem far removed from a child's life, but the story-book friends of foreign lands bring an understanding of other ways and other hopes that opens the road to knowledge and proves a balance wheel of value in later years.

In short, the Library provides material for all ages. From the very young up through high school to college and on to the advanced student and specialist. Above all, the average interested citizen who finds difficulty in learning more than his own newspaper tells him, finds here correlated information on all aspects of foreign affairs. Here he may judge for himself between conflicting opinions, may weigh statements and figures from different sources.

The Library is open to the public every week-day from 10 A.M. to 5 P.M. A trained staff is present to help the reader find the exact material desired or to give such guidance in the selection of material as may be required. Special bibliographical service may be had on request.

In conclusion, the Library of International Relations gratefully acknowledges the continued and generous cooperation of the John Crerar Library which provides the space for the new collection.

FOREWORD

To dream is to live forever. To see with the eyes of a child is to be forever young. It is the secret knowledge of these things that causes people in all places to smile at the birth of a child, to put away for that day the hard knowledge of things as they are, to feast, and to wish for the child long life and happiness.

The hope of a family, of a country, of the world, lies in its children. But such is the complexity of the world that it is no longer enough to feast and to smile at the child in his cradle, placing all one's hopes in his accidental groping through the world to long life and happiness. The growth of educational facilities in every country is evidence of the fact that each nation recognizes the importance of placing in its children's hands the tools for their future life. Mere literacy has ceased to be the goal. Adjustment to environment, understanding of that environment and control of one's world have come to be the aims of education. One's world, having burst its bounds and become everyone's world, the problem of guidance is profound. Neither the microscope nor the telescope alone, but both together, are needed for understanding the world. Before one's eyes can see the whole there must be an understanding of the parts.

To this end the child is given first the microscope. He may wander through museums which have gathered the records of man's long climb through the ages, his methods of adapting natural forces to his own uses, his ways of finding food and clothes and shelter. In aquariums, planetariums, natural science museums he may see the phenomena of the physical world. In schools he will be shown the records of contemporary life. In libraries he will find the hopes and loves and laughter of all peoples.

Having placed in his hands the microscope, it is for every agency to teach the child to appraise the bits of information and to lift his eyes to the telescope. There is no gift more precious to the child than knowledge which enables him to control his world. Knowledge is the necessary prerequisite and control is the essence of civilization.

It is with the hope of joining hands with those who have already offered such splendid information to children that the Story Cove has gathered books from many lands in many languages. It offers itself as one more "Port of Call" for the child who is exploring the world. Nothing is more common to all the world than children's books. The tales of Anderson and Grimm and Perrault are claimed by everyone. Pinocchio and Alice and Heidi are friends with children everywhere. Picture books need no interpreter. The classics of each nation which have been loved over many years are joys that supersede all nationality, all creed, all barriers, social and economic. Knowing these joys the child may come to feel that the true pride in being French or Japanese or English is the pride of having added strength or beauty to the world through individuality, the pride of being one strong link indispensable to the whole long chain of life.

Invited to the christening of the new-born child, we forget for the moment those things in life that would make our hopes seem futile and gather up our brightest wishes. With all the world we wish for the new child, eyes that will see, ears that will hear, hands that will shape the raw materials of the earth into bits of beauty, hearts that will beat with the throbbing currents of the universe....long life with dreams.
