What Becomes of Your Old Gold?

THE refining of precious metals is an exacting procedure requiring the use of fire and chemicals. Every impurity is removed and the content reduced to pure noble metals such as gold, silver, platinum, palladium, iridium, etc.

These metals are shown here in the pure metallic form, in solution, as a precipitate and in combination with other metals—also as applied in industry, profession and arts.

Thomas J. Dee & Co. is better known as the Refiner for the Dental and Jewelry Trade. They have specialized in this field since 1889, and have every modern facility for recovering precious metals from all forms of waste.

Polishings, floor sweeps, washings, hypo solutions, book binders' waste, and of course every form of jewelry or dental scrap finds its way into our refinery.

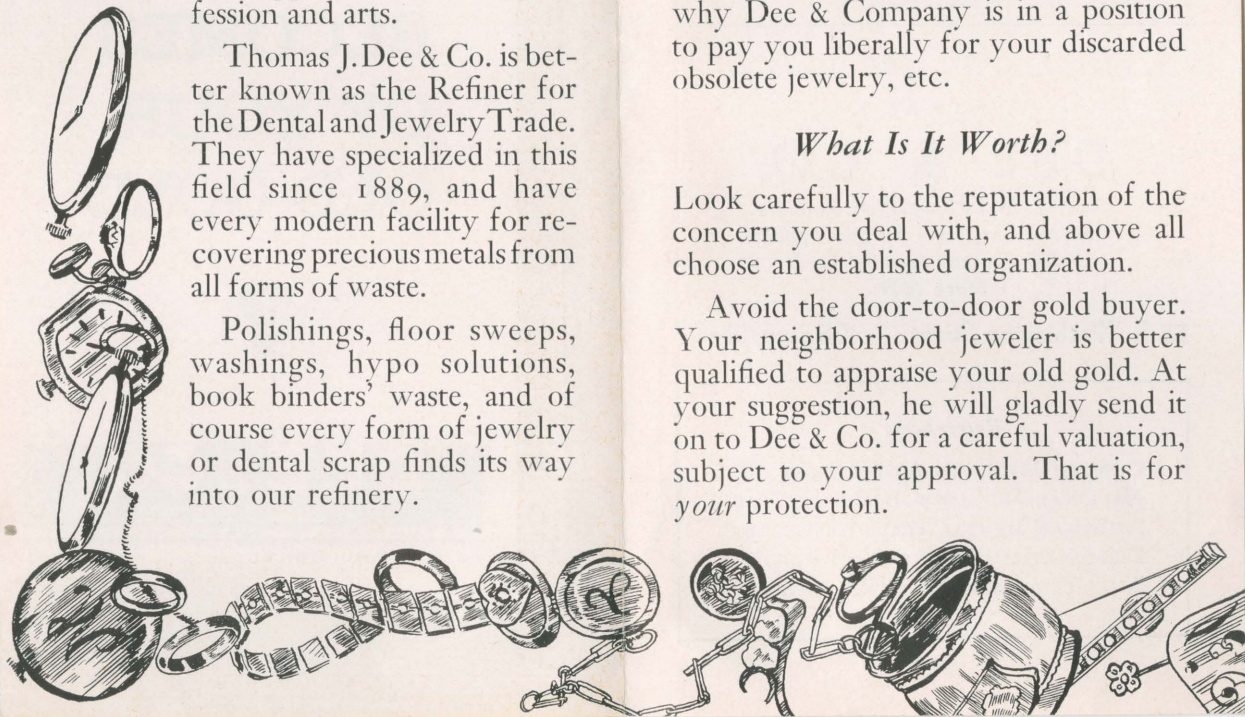

After refining, we use these metals to manufacture gold alloys used by manufacturing jewelers, dentists, electro platers, chemical houses, electrical equipment concerns, band instrument manufacturers and others too numerous to mention.

We require quantities of old jewelry and other forms of waste to keep our Plant working at full capacity. That is why Dee & Company is in a position to pay you liberally for your discarded obsolete jewelry, etc.

What Is It Worth?

Look carefully to the reputation of the concern you deal with, and above all choose an established organization.

Avoid the door-to-door gold buyer. Your neighborhood jeweler is better qualified to appraise your old gold. At your suggestion, he will gladly send it on to Dee & Co. for a careful valuation, subject to your approval. That is for your protection.

Get Cash

You will be agreeably surprised with our check which will go forward promptly on receipt of your obsolete discarded chain, watch case, ring, spectacle frames, brooch, necklace, pins, bracelets, sterling spoons, trays or any item containing precious metal. Your shipment is always held intact awaiting approval of our offer.
