Picturesque towers, ancient churches and elaborate fountains will bring beauty and charm to this Mexican village, now under construction for the opening of the new World's Fair in Chicago May 28. Colorful Mexican fiestas, with native costumes, music and dances, will brighten the general picture. Fifteen "foreign villages" in the new Fair will offer the visitor the unique opportunity of making, in effect, a tour of the world in a single day.

Open grilles like those shown in this artist's sketch will allow visitors to see what is going on in the Mexican village of the new World's Fair in Chicago without going inside. This old portico is copied from a gateway in a small Mexican town and is typical of the ancient buildings that will feature the village, one of fifteen that will offer the visitor the opportunity of "touring the world" in a single day after the Fair opens May 28.

Icicles hang from the eaves of this spire in the Black Forest village of the New World's Fair in Chicago. Air-conditioning in the buildings and synthetic snow in the air give the community the atmosphere of eternal winter. There is even real ice-skating all summer long on the frozen mill pond.
Tile roofs in close companionship in the Swiss Village at the World's Fair of 1934. They look down on cobbled streets and shops and the statue of the Dancing Bear and much Old World color. Chalets snuggle at the foot of "prop" mountains and all is gay. (S)
"The harp that once through Tara's Halls" would find itself completely at home at the World's Fair of 1933, for here is the roof of Tara Hall rebuilt, in replica, as one of the chief features of the Irish Village. Ceilings and dragons add to the romance of the color of the Guild God.
Tower in the Black Forest Village at the World's Fair in Chicago showing the stork family on its nest. Snow and icicles give a wintry touch to the roofs. The village depicts a typical Black Forest community and there is much gaiety — as that's the way of things in these hills.
This is a corner in the Old English village, now being constructed at the new World’s Fair which opens in Chicago May 28. Here the sightseer will find faithful reproductions of such buildings famed in English history and literature as the Tower of London, the Cheshire Cheese inn, Ann Hathaway’s cottage, Dickens’ Old Curiosity Shop and many others. There will be fifteen “foreign villages” at the Fair this year, offering the visitor the unique opportunity of “touring the world” in a single day.
