prisoners of war, and it was their fate to die in the first line, leaving their families -

3. and not the land was occupied in the same manner. But the land was occupied by the British, who used it for grazing purposes.

4. The British government decided to settle the land with Europeans. They began to build houses and farms on the land.

5. The land was then called New Zealand. It is now one of the most developed countries in the world. It has a modern economy, a high standard of living, and a stable political system.
