My Dear Robert

I send Mr. Downing to Warrenton to scrounge to pay off my bonds due on Monday and to hire some negroes for me. I shall therefore be obliged to you if you can send me by the bearer the money for the pork you purchased of me. I know from experience the outlay required to establish a farm as you are now doing and therefore would not have made this call upon you if I could either have collected money or succeeded in getting any flour to market, but I have been able to do neither.

Yours affectionately,

A. M. Marshall

Andersen, Ward
Winchester, Nov. 20th 1857

Dear Mr. Dout that,

I have thought it right to inform you at once of cousin James Marshall's opinion upon my mother's will. He stated to me in a conversation with him that an advance of land could be made by my mother but that it would not be valued until her death so that we would only gain the advantage of any improvement made upon the land by buildings and not of any improvement made on the land in any other way. He also states that if a sale of land should be made by any one of the children to whom my mother had advanced land that they would be responsible to the estate of the value of the land not when it was sold but what it would be valued at her death. For instance suppose my mother should give you now a servant woman and children which were rather an expense to you. He states that you would be responsible to the estate at my mother's death for the value of the woman and children at any increase which she might have after she had been given upon. He states she has no right to sell stock. I am afraid that we cannot have an appraisal for the court has never issued any order for these commissioners which we gave them a list of. Mr Templeman has paid two hundred dollars on the tract purchased of Mr. James. James advises that a compromise be made with him. He says that in this case it would
To 1st Question

The court had no power to appoint appraisers, their appointment might safely be disregarded. At the same time if it is desirable for any purpose that an inventory of the personal property should be put on the record, advantage may be taken of this erroneous order of the Court, to get an inventory on the record.

2nd Question

The Executor can make advances of land to the children but she can not give to a child more than its share according to the will, thus she can not give to one child more than 30 acres of the "best land" so as to break upon the right of the other children to the same quantity each of the "best land," even the others might be made equal out of the inferior lands of the personal estate.

3rd Question

The Executor has nothing to do with making "distribution" among the devisees or remaindermen— that is to take place at her death, not in her life time—all that she can do is to make "advances" on account of their shares to the devisees, and if she exceeds the share in any such advances to a child, it would be corrected by a reduction at her death, and the result would be that she would only have given to the child her life interest in the excess over the true share, which she has a clear right to do, even if she gave the whole to one for her life.
The money to make up inequalities in the value of the several 300 acres, would come out of the Testator's money funds at the death of the Executrix, life tenant, if they are sufficient. If not, out of his other personal estate or by a charge on the allotments which are most valuable for equality of partition.

4th Question. The Executrix has no power to sell. A title to the land sold by her can only be made by the Devisees in remainder joining her in a deed to the purchaser. As some are minors, this cannot now be done. She had best compromise with the purchaser and get him to give up the contract; otherwise he may sue her for damages.

5th Question

The 500 acres advanced by the Testator to Jacqueline can only be ascertained by a proof of what 500 acres he was left in the possession of. Part proof will do.

6th Question

The courts of Virginia have power to sell Infants' real estate where it is shown to be the joint interest of the Infants that a sale should be made.

7th Question

Advancements made by the widow would not bear interest during her life, for she gives her life estate to the child.

This is a copy of a answers made by James Marshall of Winchester to Questions asked him by me.
