My Dear Miss Peabody.

I have read both your letters with great interest, and I hardly know which to admire most the work of Sarah or your self-sacrificing devotion.
I have known
nothing like either.
There is money

Sarah when she comes on to visit you I do not know where I shall be at that time but expect to be away trying myself to get a little vacation. All my arrangements for the summer have been interfered with by the sickness of a relative in my house. And now having got a letter from her. I am trying to get off. I hope you will enjoy her visit. I return her letter which I am sure you will like to read.

Enough appropriated for Indian Schools so that Sarah's school could receive some support from the government if it were so disposed.
But where this money is to be expended is fixed by law under the control of Superintendent of Indian Schools. This Administration has a new man whom I do not know
and could not influence.
What a good time you will have with
