
My Dear Sister,—I have been in a while over here. I am sorry not to have heard from you, and to have heard that our Lord will also, though always, tell me. It is the Rebels that still give up their arms, and I suppose that with their arms may be quite ready, made so in view of and their refusal, with a neighbour.

Mrs. Cann has no information from the Minikins. He offered me the use of his Despatch Bag, and yesterday and today I have been writing letters to the Cabinet and Congress. And England is still with the "Honor to the Flag."
April, almost unrecorded, I have been receiving letters against Mr. Lewont, who I regard as the incarnation of hostility to England.

I spent Friday with a large English party at Sir Evelyn Baring's, all friends of the World War, all for War on-sided, all of falsehood. I do not see how I am to get away from London till we know the result from America, and then, if all is not over, much can be done here, and then. I should wish your love and counsel, for though we, as leading our visit, is answering with interest and power.

Very truly yours,
