The Lucky Elopement.

"Oh, charmer divine! if you'll only be mine,
I vow to adore you for life;

While your old daddy there, lies asleep in his chair,
"Let's to Gretna, and be man and wife,"

And now all alive, helter skelter they drive,
The carriage all smothered in dust:

But in spite of their wheels, the old boy's at their heels.

Safe at Gretna at last, now the knot they tie fast.
And just as the broomstick they've cross'd,
Old Daddy pops in, but he too late to win,
For the race by two seconds he's lost.

Now his wrath to appease, see the pair on their knees,
And Fortune, as umpire, who cries,
"Dear sir, don't be rash, here is plenty of cash,
In the shape of a Lottery Prize!"

New State Lottery contains Four Prizes of £20,000, and Thirty-four other Capitals, All Sterling Money!—No Blanks!—and all to be decided in One Day, 5th OCTOBER.

Robin Roughhead.—Odds bobs! I've a waundy moind to have a chance in this same Lottery. My mother has been a-dreaming like mad—the money is no great deal—and if I should get a Prize, haw the folks would stare when I gang'd back! Ecod! I'd have a farm, and cows, and sheep, and pigs!—Here goes.

Who'd ha' thought that my journey to Lunnun would ha' turn'd out so well? Ecod! that Lottery Office Man is a rare fellow! Well! I have now gotten a farm well stocked—and though I might look a little higher than neighbour Dobbin's daughter, as I have gotten so much money, yet my good fortune sha'nt make me break my promise. When we are married, we shall be as happy as the day is long—and as Fortune has been so kind to me, I shall never refuse my mite to the needy.

James Whiting, Printer, Finsbury Place, London.
Come along, Tom, or we shall be bored to death—
That fellow Jack has no gratitude—when he had money, I took an infinite deal of pains to teach him to spend it like a gentleman—now it's gone, he is always teasing me with his wants.—It annoys me exceedingly.

Hallo! Jack—my dear fellow, won't you stop, and let me congratulate you upon your good fortune? I heard you had obtained a prize in the Lottery, and it gave me infinite pleasure.

Jack. Did you speak to me? I don't recollect—I'm in haste, and to be bored thus annoys me exceedingly.

The State Lottery, which will begin and finish on the above day, will enable many families to exchange the lowly dwelling and coarse fare for the enjoyments derived from the possession of a splendid mansion, extensive pleasure grounds, luxurious living, &c. &c. for on that day large fortunes will be distributed to those who court the smiles of fortune.

£200,000 in Prizes!!

If you are annoyed by duns, or have any reason to dread the approach of John Doe and Richard Roe, the way is now open by which you may put such disagreeable assailants to flight, and once more shine forth in the hemisphere of fashion, commanding respect from all around you. The Lottery will all be drawn on the 20th instant, and a snug fortune of £4,000 a year may be obtained by One Number.
