

7
419
February 8, 1916.

due honor and courtesy. This letter follows a telegram that I am also sending.

It was a great pleasure to see you at Latwood.

Dear Dr. Judson:-

Sincerely yours,

Circumstances on both sides made a little delay in my interview with Mr. Joseph H. Choate. He is under positive orders from his physicians not to risk any such travel or effort as would be involved in going to Chicago. He was obliged to decline going to Harvard last June to make the address at the opening of the great new library building.

Mr. Choate was exceedingly pleased with the invitation, and was very complimentary, and even enthusiastic, in his expressions regarding the development and greatness of the University of Chicago. He asked me to tell you that he regarded this invitation as one of the most complimentary that he had ever received. He seems in good health and spirits for a man who was eighty-four last week; but he explained the circumstances under which he feels it impossible to make any of the engagements that he would be glad to make if he were younger and stronger. I hope you will call upon him some time when you are here, because I feel that these elder statesmen should not be overlooked in the rush of our current affairs, and that they should receive

February 8, 1918.

Dear Dr. Johnson:-

Circumstances on both sides made a little delay in my interview with Mr. Joseph H. Choate. He is under positive orders from his physicians not to risk any such travel or effort as would be involved in going to Chicago. He was obliged to decline going to Harvard last June to make the address at the opening of the great new library building.

Mr. Choate was exceedingly pleased with the invitation, and was very complimentary, and even enthusiastic in his expressions regarding the development and greatness of the University of Chicago. He asked me to tell you that he regarded this invitation as one of the most complimentary that he had ever received. He seems in good health and spirits for a man who was eighty-four last week; but he explained the circumstances under which he feels it impossible to make any of the engagements that he would be glad to make if he were younger and stronger. I hope you will call upon him some time when you are here, because I feel that these elder statesmen should not be overlooked in the rush of our current affairs, and that they should receive

Dr. Judson

-2-

February 8, 1916.

due honor and courtesy. This letter follows a telegram that I am also sending.

It was a great pleasure to see you at Lakewood.

Dear Dr. Judson:-

Sincerely yours,

Circumstances on both sides made a little delay in my interview with Mr. Joseph H. Choate. He is under positive orders from his physicians not to risk a long travel, and he felt as would be involved in going to Chicago. He was obliged to decline going to Harvard last June to make the address at the opening of the great new library building.

Went Shaw.

Dr. H. P. Judson,
University of Chicago,
Chicago, Ill.

Mr. Choate was exceedingly pleased with the invitation, complimentary, and even enthusiastic, in his expressions regarding the development and greatness of the University of Chicago. He asked me to tell you that he regarded this invitation as one of the most complimentary that he had ever received. He seems in good health and spirits for a man who was eighty-four last week, but he explained the circumstances under which he feels it impossible to make any of the engagements that he would be glad to make if he were younger and stronger. I hope you will call upon him some time when you are here, because I feel that these older statesmen should not be overlooked in the work of our current affairs, and that they should receive due honor and courtesy. This letter follows a telegram that I am also sending.

Dr. Johnson

It was a great pleasure to see you at Lakewood.

Sincerely yours,

W. H. P. Johnson

Dr. H. P. Johnson,
University of Chicago,
Chicago, Ill.