March 9th, 1910.

My dear Sir:

The business men of some of the large eastern cities have entered into active, efficient co-operation with the commercial departments of the high schools of their respective cities. Highly commendable results have been obtained in Boston, New York, Cleveland and Pittsburgh. The business men were able to give very valuable suggestions as to what material should be included in the course of training for boys and girls looking forward to commercial work.

The Committee on Education of the City Club of Chicago is making a detailed investigation of the status of commercial education in this city. You in your direct contact with business affairs see many applications of the different kinds of commercial training, and in a different way from persons engaged in other lines of business. Kindly give us the benefit of your experience.

Very truly yours,

Dear Sir:

Your favor of the 8th inst. with enclosure received.

It would hardly be worth while for me to fill out the questionnaire, as of course it is adapted to offices primarily of a business character. I should answer your fourth question (a) in the affirmative, and (b) in the negative. It seems to me that the work should be distributed throughout the high school curriculum. I should answer question 5 in this way: It would in my opinion be better for suitable commercial courses to be provided in all the high schools, rather than a single school. Question 6 I should answer in the affirmative. As to question 7, it would seem to me that it might be possible to arrange such connection with the best high school students in commercial courses on the one hand, and commercial houses in the city on the other as is now in existence between certain students in the Lewis Institute with manufacturing establishments. These students spend part of their time in the school classes, and part of their time in
