Mr. Frederick T. Haskell,
Illinois Trust & Savings Bank, Chicago:

My dear Mr. Haskell:

Your personal letter of January Twenty-second, in reference to French lectures, has been received. The answer sent by my Secretary under date of January twenty-third gives the facts in the case; there was an misunderstanding.

If we had a list of the lectures, we should be glad to keep them in mind and when lectures were to be delivered to send them announcements; until it was too late to notify. Very truly yours, lecture, but I sent word to her husband later, announcing that the lectures were to be given in the lecture hall in Cobb Hall every Monday afternoon, at four o'clock. That was my information from what seemed reliable authority, and the newspapers confirmed my belief. Soon after reading your letter I saw Professor Ingres, who gave the readings on L'Aiglon, and he informed th that all the readings
Jan. 23rd, 1901.

Were given last week, so that the ignorance of some sources of information is explained, and the
Mr. Frederick T. Haskell, responsible for the misinformation rests with me.

Illinois Trust & Savings Bank, Chicago.

My dear Mr. Haskell:

I regret more than I can express the inconvenience caused by me, and only excuse myself on the grounds opened by me under his authority during his absence, of information seemed so trustworthy.

Quite frequently causes of lectures to French Given, and perhaps I can atone for my blunder in this affair by sending a correct notice to the lectures Mrs. Marsh spoke to me in regard to the lectures and I told her that I would look the matter up.

I could not get definite information until it was too late to notify her of the first lecture, but I sent word to her husband later, announcing that the lectures were to be given in the lecture hall in Cobb Hall every Monday afternoon, at four o'clock. That was my information from what seemed reliable authority, and the newspapers confirmed my belief. Soon after reading your letter
I saw Professor Ingras, who gave the readings on L'Aiglon, and he informed me that all the readings
I have been informed that the new Peking University and the new National University will be opened soon after the completion of the new buildings. I have been authorized to announce your letter and the receipt of your report. Soon after the completion of the new buildings, I have been authorized to announce the opening of the new universities. I have been informed that the new Peking University and the new National University will be opened soon after the completion of the new buildings.
were given last week, so that the ignorance of our Bureau of Information is explained, and the whole responsibility for the misinformation rests with me. WILLIAM R. HARPER.

I must regret more than I can express the annoyance caused by me, and only excuse myself on the ground that my information seemed to be trustworthy.

Quitting frequently courses of lectures in French are open to the public, and perhaps I can alone for my blunder in this affair by sending a correct notice to the ladies some other time.

Yours truly,

FRANCIS W. SHEPPARDSON,
The President's Secretary.
To continue my letter, I would like to share more information about my recent travel to Europe. I had a wonderful opportunity to explore various countries and cities, each with its unique charm and culture. The food was especially delightful, and I enjoyed trying new dishes at every opportunity.

I also visited several historical sites, including ancient ruins and museums that showcased the rich history of the region. These experiences have provided me with a deeper understanding of the various cultures and traditions that have shaped the world as we know it today.

I am currently planning my next trip and looking forward to exploring new destinations. I will continue to share my adventures and experiences with you in future letters.

Yours truly,

[Signature]

France W. [Last Name]
Dear Sir:

My only excuse for inflicting you with this letter is that I cannot obtain the desired information elsewhere.

Several ladies of my acquaintance have been greatly interested in the subject of French lectures, and were told several months ago that lectures in French were given every week at the University of Chicago, and were open to the public. About two weeks ago an acquaintance of one of these ladies said she would appeal to a gentleman who would surely know what was going on in that line at the University, and I think she mentioned a Professor Shepardson as the one. Last Tuesday word was received that this gentleman had stated that French lectures were given in Cobb Chapel every Monday afternoon at 4 o'clock. This information was apparently confirmed by an article which appeared in the 'Chicago Tribune' on the 15th inst., which article I enclose herewith.

Yesterday afternoon two of the parties interested went down to the University to hear the lecture. There were nine people gathered there for the same purpose, three of whom were students in the University. Three people applied at different times at the Bureau of Information, but could get no satisfaction from the young man in charge, who stated that he knew nothing about the French lectures, except if they were to be given he supposed they would be given in a certain room at the South end of the second floor. After waiting more than half an hour, the party decided it would be useless to wait longer, and left the room. On the way out, one of the students again interviewed the young man in charge of the Bureau of Information, who stated that the lectures were all given last week, and there would be no more.

My object in writing you this letter is to ascertain, first, if lectures in the French language are given at the University, and if so, whether they are open to the public; and secondly, on what days and in what building they are given.

Thanking you in advance for your courtesy in giving me the information, I remain,

Very truly yours,

[Signature]

PRESIDENT WILLIAM R. HARPER, #2

VAINLY SEEK LIGHT ON DRAMA.

University of Chicago Students Hear an "Interpretation" of "L'Aiglon" in French.

A reading of "L'Aiglon" by Professor Maxime Ingres at the University of Chicago yesterday was somewhat dismaying to students who had been led to believe he would interpret the drama for the benefit of those who expect to see Bernhardt and Coquelin next week. A large crowd of theater-loving students, who carried notebooks, were on hand in Cobb Chapel. As the first few sentences the students leaned forward eagerly, then came puzzled expressions.

"What is he saying, anyhow?" asked one of the girls.

"Sounds like a piecemeal from a type-setting machine," suggested a youth.

Gradually it dawned upon the students that Professor Ingres was talking in French. The notebooks were put away, and one after another those in the rear of the room tiptoed their way out, while those who remained nodded their heads appreciatively whenever they heard a word which bore traces of familiarity.

"'L'Aiglon' is by far the greatest production that has come from the pen of Restaud," said Professor Ingres, in part.

"It reminds one much of Victor Hugo, but is far from Hugo's standard. The best thing about the play is its fidelity to historical fact."

Professor Ingres will continue his readings each Monday for the next five weeks.