Dear Sir:-

Your favor of the 10th inst. was duly received. I have been for many years interested in the improvement of municipal government. The commission plan is one which I have long advocated, and which I am glad to see is making its way. In our Department of Political Science we have been doing what seemed possible to interest young men in civic work, and to train them in some of its aspects. We could do more if we had funds which we could use for that purpose. Just as rapidly as trained efficiency instead of political efficiency becomes a standard throughout the public service will young men seek to fit themselves for that kind of life.

Very truly yours,

In our Department of Politics since we have been gone and some changes to our interest young men in this work, and to train them at some of the institutions. Dear Sir:-

You are doubtless familiar with the agitation spreading over the country for reform municipal government, and I take the liberty of addressing you upon a phase of this subject which has not yet been solved, and that is the question of getting expert and trained officials. In order to bring the matter before you I beg to enclose a booklet and a clipping containing addresses I have made upon this subject, and call your attention to my last address in which I advocate a system that is patterned after the present corporation system, and has for its basis the appointing of officials by a council or board of directors instead of by direct vote of the people. Under such a plan officials would not be appointed for two or four years, but for a longer period, anywhere from eight to twelve years, while a new council could be elected every one or two years.

You perhaps know that the commission form of government is already introduced in nearly one hundred cities of the United States, but unfortunately under this system the term of office expires every two to four years, and the incumbents are replaced with new men, but with the spread of this form of government and the possible introduction of a more business-like and up to date system, a demand will arise for men who have had experience or training in the various departments of a modern city corporation. For instance, every city will need a man familiar with the system of sewerage, one of the most important departments in a modern city, and unfortunately one that is most generally neglected. The same applies to the department of street paving and street repairs, to parks and the "city beautiful", to the water works system, electric lighting, accounting or finance department, etc.

In my opinion there will be a sudden awakening to the deplorable condition of our present system, and there will be a great scramble to find men capable of reorganizing the business of the cities of this country, hence the question arises, Why would it not be advisable for universities to take up this matter and add the study of these various departments to their curriculum? It is true we will get a great many men through practical training, but they start in under a great handicap. To illustrate, the average board of public works is made up of inexperienced men; I will cite one example which is typical of all: The Board of Public Works of our city is made up of three men, one of whom was formerly in the liquor business, another foreman in a machine shop, and the third is a building contractor. These men have charge of all public works in this city, which includes streets, sewers, alleys, public improvements, etc. They will spend hundreds of thousands of dollars of the people's money during their four year term of office, and it is needless to suggest that as each year goes by they will look back with a shudder upon the mistakes they made during the previous year, and at the end of four years they will be the best judges as to the unbusiness-like and wasteful system which forces them out of office, and puts three new men in charge thereof who must also serve an apprenticeship at the public expense. What applies to this one department also applies to all other departments of city government. If we could keep these men in office eight or twelve years, they would become valuable public officials; and this one feature of the present system must and will be corrected in the near future. But after all would it not be better to put such departments in charge of men educated and trained in the work of these respective departments, and will not this be the tendency in the future.

I should like to have your views on this subject, and assuring you in advance of my appreciation of any suggestions you may offer, beg to remain,

Very truly yours,

My dear Mr. Root:

I am very much gratified to learn that you are likely to take up seriously a study of the distressing political conditions in this state. I am by no means expressing an opinion on the merits of the case pending before the Senate, and have no doubt whatever that of course you will reach your conclusion absolutely on the merits of the case, but politics in both parties in this state needs the very serious attention of all men who are interested in the best things for our republic.

My dear Dr. Judson:

As I still recall with great pleasure my meeting you here during the Peace Conference last year and as I know that you have taken considerable interest in Persia and her people during the past, as shown by the special kindness which Persian students have always received at your University, I take the liberty of laying before you the following matter which I trust will prove of interest to you. I refer to the enclosed paper regarding the society proposed therein.

I am of course positive that you fully realize the far-reaching and manifold influences which the formation of such an organization will necessarily exert on the future friendly relations between my country and yours.

To this proposed society, and to it alone, in this country I expect to give my hearty support, and I am assured that I shall be able to enlist in its favor a large number of the most influential and representative men in the Persia of today. Up to the present time I have never been connected with any plans looking toward the formation of such an organization, but I now believe that the time is ripe for taking this step—in view of the marked interest which both my countrymen and men of great prominence here are taking in the increasingly friendly relations between Persia and America.

Of course as a diplomatic officer, I cannot take publicly, that active and prominent part in the society which I otherwise would do, but at all events it shall have my full support and it is an end toward which I have looked for many years and I therefore take pleasure in writing to you in this personal way about it.

I am writing on this same subject among others to:
Dr. Andrew D. White of Cornell, Dr. Eliot of Harvard, Dr. David Starr Jordan of Leland-Stanford University & President Benj. Ide Wheeler of the University of California.

With kindest regards I remain with great respect,

Sincerely yours,

Dr. Harry P. Judson,

STATEMENT OF PURPOSES

It is proposed to form an association or organization in this country, to be known as "The American-Iranian Co-operative Union," the general aims of which shall be the encouragement of closer commercial, economic and educational relations between the two countries, as well as an increase in other mutual interests.

Speaking at the White House, to the Conference on the Worldwide Extension of the Young Men's Christian Associations, on October 20, 1910, President Taft said:

"The principle is that nations and people owe to other nations and people the same kind of assistance in the pathway of civilization and progress that one man owes to another in a smaller community, that neighbors owe to each other in helpfulness.

There is not anything in the Constitution of this Government or our history that limits us in the work that we shall do to aid other nations, especially where that work is the result not of Governmental action, but of voluntary action by associations of individuals who have the opportunity for usefulness and who seize it."

Persia is just such a world-neighbor.

The remarkable transformation through which the Persian people have recently passed has not yet received from the American people the attention which it deserves.

Persia is today a constitutional monarchy, with a modern and enlightened constitution, and a wide-spread and ineradicable determination on the part of her people to adopt progressive ideas in all branches of governmental activity. Although she still has the misfortune of not being well-understood by some of the great powers of the world, and despite
APPENDIX TO REPORT

The Department of Commerce, in accordance with its statutory powers, has prepared a report on the economic conditions of the United States. The report is based on the latest available data and includes an analysis of the current economic situation, as well as projections for the near future.

The report highlights the importance of international trade and the need for continued cooperation among nations. It also discusses the role of technology in driving economic growth and the importance of education and workforce development in ensuring a skilled and competitive labor force.

The report concludes with recommendations for policy makers, including the need for increased investment in infrastructure, the importance of addressing income inequality, and the necessity of implementing effective policies to support small businesses and entrepreneurship.

The report is available for download on the Department of Commerce's website, and is also available in hard copy at local libraries and government offices.
Dear Dr. Madison:

It was my pleasure some time ago to call your attention to the approaching semi-centennial of the American Civil War. I believe that I further informed you that we were planning a literary memorial.

Since writing to you the work has taken definite form and a memorial library of ten volumes is now being prepared by eminent American historical authorities, in which is to be given the first authoritative historical record to the seven thousand original war negatives taken on the battle-grounds and in the armies by the government photographers during the great conflict.

Such men as Librarian Cheney of the War Department, Dr. Holden at West Point; General Marcus Wright and General Greeley of the War Department, are extending valuable advice in this historical undertaking which we believe will be the most important contribution ever made to this remarkable epoch in our national development.

General Frederick Dent Grant, General G. W. Custis Lee, Honorable Robert T. Lincoln, and many others have extended valuable co-operation.

President Taft has contributed a few autographed words as an introductory, and Secretary Dickinson of the War Department has also agreed to do so.

We are making this a great national tribute.
The governors of the states are contributing messages. It seems to us that every American college should be represented in this historical record to reflect the educational thought on this anniversary. I wish to ask if you would be willing to extend a few words as a semi-centennial message to be recorded with this great collection of historical negatives—merely a few words of good will and American brotherhood.

I assure you that it will be deeply appreciated by the American people. We believe that these expressions will do much toward erasing the last vestige of partisanship on this fiftieth anniversary.

It will be a magnificent tribute to American character if all the leaders of contemporary thought will clip hands across the years, not as Northerners, nor as Southerners, but as united Americans.

We are now working indefatigably to get these memorial volumes on the press. Most of the material has been written. I especially desire to have at least a few words from you during the next few days. Can you grant me an early reply?

You will find the complete announcement in the closing reading pages of the November issue of the American Review of Reviews.

Yours very truly,

Editor-in-Chief

P.S. You may be interested to know that we are preparing this memorial library under the auspices of Dr. Albert Shaw, and the editorial staff of the American Review of Reviews which is in itself the strongest testimonial to its quality and character.

Since then, the work has taken definite form and a memorial library of ten volumes is now being prepared by eminent American historical authorities, to whom I am indebted for the first authentic record of the conflict which you have undertaken and wish it all success.

History records few instances of a more complete obliteration of the animosity of civil war than our history affords in the last half-century. All that is evil in that older time has vanished into what I hope will be a forgotten past; all that was best and noblest survives to make the republic stronger and more true. It is these things which are matters of pride to our citizens without regard to sections.

My dear Dr. Judson,

As President of one of the great Universities, I know you will be interested in an effort being made here to put in motion the forces that make for civic betterment.

A Course of Lectures has been arranged which it is believed will be of much benefit, I enclose card descriptive thereof. The greatest evil to be combatted is that of Divorce and the Nevada Statute, which requires a residence of but six months to obtain a decree, has filled this City and State with a class of "Undisarable Citizens". I am firm in the belief, that no State can be progressive which permits a Statute which makes for easy Divorce and that such Statute is a menace to the Commonwealth.

In my lecture, I desire to comment upon this Statute, and as the Legislature will then be in session, to deal it a body blow, and wish to obtain the brief opinions of as many distinguished Eastern men as possible to sustain me.

Your family have always stood & for all that was clean and pure, both in public and in private life. Would it be too much of a favor to ask you to write me a brief note in support of my position.

Dear Sir:-

Your letter of this date, addressed to Mr. Kohlsaat, has been handed to me in connection with other correspondence on the same subject from Mr. George B. Swift. The Sunday Record-Herald has been planning for several months an illustrated double page under the caption: "Winter Homes of Prominent Chicagoans." This was to have been a part of the feature Mr. Swift wrote his secretary some time ago that you were preparing such an article. I tried to convince the secretary that Mr. Swift must have enlisted your kindly services, but he did not interpret Mr. Swift's information in that manner; leaving me under a difficulty assumed impression that you might be preparing a magazine article on Mr. Swift's Palm Beach estate.

A letter of yesterday, from Mr. Swift to Mr. Kohlsaat, set that misunderstanding at rights. Your communication of to-day confirms my original impression.

It is needless to say that The Sunday Record-Herald is much gratified that so capable a hand as yours should pen a description of Mr. Swift's place. I have hoped to be able to use this feature before April first. Will it be asking too much that you should prepare an article of about 600 to 1000 words and have it mailed to reach the Sunday editor by March 15th?

With personal thanks to you for this kindness, I am,

Flamingo, dear Miss Ames:

The thefts reported in your paper of February 28 are of two classes. The ones on which you dwell at the greatest length are clearly cases that can in no way be prevented. The University cannot undertake to employ detectives to follow about guileless persons who expose their property as I am sorry to say, the young women of the University expose their valuable possessions.

All that I can say is that either the morale of the student body is at a woefully low state or that some professional thief is working among your fellow students. If this second supposition be true, the University of course by employing a detective can prevent many thefts.

Kansas legislature has enacted a measure providing a board of administration to take the place of all boards of regents and assume all duties and powers which has heretofore been exercised by the three boards of six regents each governing the state university agricultural college and state normal schools. This board of administration consists of three members with salary of twenty five hundred dollars each per annum.
