President W.R. Harper.
Chicago University.

My dear Dr. Harper,

Please accept my sincere thanks for the courtesy of your reply. I wish that some of you men, whose influence is almost unbounded, would try to give us in each of the American cities at least one paper that stands for truth. The sting is taken from your statement by the counter-balancing part of it.

I hold no brief for a certain kind of theology which is undoubtedly taught in connection with the Bible Institute, neither do I care to defend what seem to me the vagaries of some of those who have been most intimately associated with its work. I nevertheless believe that it would be quite easy to demonstrate that the amount of good done by the Institute far outweighs the harm. Of course personally, and just between ourselves, I am inclined to think that what many would call, yourself included I expect, the scientific conception of the Bible, for which the University of Chicago stands, has done incalculably more harm to Christianity than all the narrowness of the Bible Institute position. Of course personally I should hardly be prepared to call your method the scientific one. I should rather call it the method of the hypothesis. I know I am not an expert, but I venture to claim that I am a juror, who has given what attention has been possible to the testimony on two sides, of a great question; and I do not feel prepared to accept many of the conclusions of the so-called scientific method, while yet I am perfectly prepared to give up anything in the interests of truth.

If you will allow me, without the slightest feeling of bitterness, and without presuming to think that I have the right to dictate to you, I should like to say that the objectionable part of your statement in public is that an Institute was named. I know to my sorrow, that this method has been adopted by certain who have

President W. E. Matthews

Dear Mr. Matthews,

I am pleased to express my appreciation for the opportunity to speak at the Institute. I wish to thank you for your generous invitation in connection with the American Studies Symposium.

I have heard of the Institute's work and am aware of its high standards of scholarship and service. I am particularly impressed with the contributions you have made in the field of education and the dedication you have shown to the advancement of religious knowledge.

I have been encouraged by the reports I have received from those who have attended previous sessions of the Institute. I am confident that the Institute will continue to play a significant role in the development of religious thought and understanding.

I am grateful for the warm hospitality extended to me during my stay in Chicago. I hope to have the opportunity to return at some future date and to continue my association with the Institute.

Sincerely yours,

had a past connection with the Institute. I am compelled to say, however, that whether by them or by you, I think it a mistake that we should attack each other by name.

To the great sum total of the work honest men are doing for the Kingdom of God, it will be discovered that men of the most opposite views have contributed. Please forgive me if I even seem to be dictatorial. I have no such wish or feeling, but being a severely orthodox man (to my own thinking), and having protested so violently among men who seem to occupy my position against attacks made upon others, and having defended the graciousness of spirit usually manifested by such heretics as yourself, I ventured to write to you before, and do so now.

Apologizing for the length of this communication.

I am,

My dear Dr. Harper,

Yours sincerely,

Dear Sir:

I had a pleasant conversation with Mr. Torrey in connection with the Institute, and I am pleased to say that I have had the privilege of working with him on some of the most important projects of the Institute. I am enclosing a letter from him expressing his appreciation of the work we are doing.

Please consider this a letter of introduction.

Yours sincerely,

My dear President Harper,

I was not able to be present at the afternoon meeting yesterday as I hoped to be. The paper this morning reproves you as having said, among other things, that "The Moody Institute and similar institutions are doing incalculable injury to the cause of Christianity."

Having suffered many things at the hands of the American press, I write to you asking if this is indeed a correct report, before making any public reference to the statement.

Hastening you in anticipation for the courtesy of a reply,

Yours ever,

Campbell Morgan.

My dear Dr. Morgan:

I have your letter of October 21st before me. The paragraph in my address to which you refer is as follows: "The Moody Institute and similar institutions are doing incalculable injury to the cause of Christianity in some ways. It is possible, however, that this injury may in part be counterbalanced by the good which is undoubtedly being done along the line of training and practical work". In making this statement I had in mind particularly the narrow and unscientific conceptions which have been preached and taught by many of the instructors in Moody Institute concerning the Bible. I am thoroughly convinced from the results of the work which I have seen that this is injurious. I have heard a score of ministers in the City of Chicago make the same statement. You will notice, however, that the newspapers did not quote the other side of the statement. I am very sorry that it seemed to me necessary to make this public statement, but it is one which I am sure many have felt. I do not myself think that your views have worked the pernicious effect which have come in connection with the teaching of others.

With sincere admiration for your work, I remain
