Historical Note

The American Association for Public Opinion Research (AAPOR) was founded in 1947 as a professional society of individuals engaged or interested in public opinion research and its allied fields. The genesis of the Association was a conference of public opinion research experts held in Central City, Colorado in the summer of 1946. The conference was convened by Harry H. Field, director of the National Opinion Research Center. The goal of the conference, as stated in the proceedings, was "to discuss problems common to all research organizations, and 'to sharpen the tools in the workshop of democracy.'"

A second conference was planned for September 1947 in Williamstown, Massachusetts on the campus of Williams College. It was here, on September 4, 1947, that two organizations were formalized: AAPOR and the World Association for Public Opinion Research (WAPOR). Public Opinion Quarterly became the Association's official journal in 1948.

Today, AAPOR's mission statement includes the following objectives:

- Educate policy makers, the media and the public at large to help them make better use of surveys and survey findings;
- Educate practitioners on new developments affecting our field;
- Advocate the highest standards of ethical conduct for survey and opinion research;
- Encourage and disseminate research and innovations that improve our methods;
- Encourage and disseminate systematic analyses of public opinion on the major issues of the day;
- Promote best practices in collecting, analyzing, and interpreting survey data;
- Provide opportunities for our members to exchange views and promote the values of our organization; and
- Act as an advocate for survey and opinion research and its practitioners.

AAPOR is governed by an Executive Council elected by the full membership each year. Throughout its history, administrative activities have also been carried out by a fluctuating number of committees and task forces, among them the Standards Committee which oversees AAPOR's Code of Professional Ethics and Practices. Additionally, the Association has seven regional chapters in the United States.
