Biographical Note

Lee Braude was a sociologist and the author of Work and Workers and A Sense of Sociology. Born in Chicago, IL in 1931, Braude studied at the University of Illinois, Urbana in 1949 and received his diploma from Wright Junior College in 1951. Prof. Braude received his A.M. from the University of Chicago in 1954 and his PhD in 1964, after which he began his professional career at the University of Wisconsin-Kenosha before moving on to the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee, Oakland College, Wayne State University, and finally ending his career at SUNY-Fredonia. At the University of Chicago, Braude served as the Vice President of the Society for Social Research (1955-56) and contributed to the USOE pilot study of social achievement in high schools (1957). His doctoral dissertation was entitled "The Rabbi: A Study of the Relation of Contingency Situations to Differential Career Structure" (1964). Braude studied under a number of notable sociologists including E.C. Hughes, Peter Blau, Anselm L. Strauss, Elihu Katz, Nelson Foote, Otis Dudley Duncan, and Herbert Blumer. This collection consists of papers and course materials from Braude's days at the University of Chicago which coincide with the "Golden Age" of Chicago sociology.

Scope Note

This collection is arranged into two series.

Series I: University of Chicago includes materials relating to Lee Braude's time at the University of Chicago.

Subseries 1: Department of Sociology includes official documents, meeting minutes, informational literature, student requirements, examinations, reading outlines, and bibliographies & syllabi from courses in the Department of Sociology.

Subseries 2: Course Materials consists of syllabi, notes, readings, and assignments that correspond with specific courses in the departments of Sociology, Social Sciences, and Anthropology. The folders are arranged chronologically, and are listed with the corresponding course number, title, professor (when known), and year of matriculation.

Subseries 3: Papers consists of journal articles, student papers, and personal work that Braude completed at the University of Chicago. This includes a grant proposal, dissertation proposal, published article, and conference.

Series II: Personal Papers contains biographical material and ephemera.
