Title Hyde Park-Kenwood Razed Buildings. Collection

Date mid-19th century-2006

Size 2.5 linear feet (5 boxes)

Repository Special Collections Research Center
University of Chicago Library
1100 East 57th Street
Chicago, Illinois 60637 U.S.A.

Abstract This collection is the result of a circa 2006 study of buildings in the Hyde Park-Kenwood neighborhood in Chicago, most of which were demolished as part of the mid-20th century urban renewal movement. This collection contains copies of photographs and illustrations of the Hyde Park-Kenwood area, along with supporting material used to develop the collection and research the images. The images represent individual structures, street scenes, aerial views, and panoramas showing businesses and properties that were relocated, repurposed or vacated during the urban renewal period. Research files in the collection include descriptions and notes on the projects; lists and indexes of addresses, street names, properties and businesses; and photocopies of architectural records produced by the Department of Urban Renewal.

Acknowledgments

Development and processing of this collection was managed by Mary Schlesinger, using photographs located at the Chicago History Museum and the University of Chicago. This work was supported by the Hyde Park Historical Society and the University of Chicago's Civic Knowledge Project.

Historical Note

In 2006, researchers supported by the Hyde Park Historical Society and the University of Chicago's Civic Knowledge Project conducted a study of buildings in Chicago's Hyde Park-Kenwood area. The study focused on buildings that were demolished or repurposed during the mid-20th century urban renewal movement, which brought massive commercial and residential redevelopment to the neighborhoods of Hyde Park, Kenwood and Woodlawn.

In this study, researcher interest focused on three areas of property development:

1. Hotels and other structures built for temporary use during the 1893 Columbian Exposition, and preserved and adapted for continued use.
2. Hyde Park's federally-funded urban renewal program, ca. 1950s-1960s, through which much of the Hyde Park neighborhood was redeveloped.
3. Development and expansion of the University of Chicago.

To document these developments, researchers assembled a collection of reproductions of photographs of demolished or repurposed buildings, and compiled lists of properties and businesses, architectural records, and research notes.

Scope Note

This collection contains copies of photographs and illustrations of the Hyde Park-Kenwood area, along with supporting material used to develop the collection and research the images. The images represent individual structures, street scenes, aerial views, and panoramas; most of the structures represented were demolished during the Hyde Park-Kenwood area's urban renewal period during the mid-20th century.

The images in the collection are organized by street name, then by block number. The original photographs date from the mid-19th through mid-20th century, while the copies were produced circa 2006. Additional identifying information is found on the backs of the copied photographs.

Research files at the end of the collection contain a description of the collection and the research project; acknowledgments and source citations; research notes on selected photographs; lists and indexes of addresses, street names, properties and businesses; and photocopies of architectural records produced by the Department of Urban Renewal.
