Biographical Note

Sinclair Lewis was born in Sauk Centre, Minnesota, on February 7, 1885. Lewis’ father was Edwin J. Lewis, a physician. His father had difficulty relating to his bookish, shy son. Lewis’ mother, Emma Kermott Lewis, died in 1891, when Lewis was six years old. Lewis’ father quickly remarried to Isabel Warner in the following year. Lewis’ childhood was, by all accounts, quiet and lonely. At the age of 13, Lewis attempted to run away from home to become a drummer boy in the Spanish-America War. Lewis was accepted to Yale in 1903, and graduated in 1908, delayed due to his time-off to work and travel.

Lewis married Grace Livingston Hegger, an editor at Vogue magazine, in 1914. They had one son, Wells Lewis, who was killed in action while serving in World War II. Lewis and Hegger divorced in 1925. Lewis remarried in 1928 to Dorothy Thompson, a political newspaper columnist. Lewis and Thompson had one son, Michael Lewis, in 1930, and divorce in 1942.
Lewis’ publishing began at Yale, mostly romantic poetry and short sketches, in the Yale Courant and the Yale Literary Magazine (which Lewis later edited). After graduation, Lewis occupied his time and earned money by writing shallow, popular stories for magazines and selling plots to American novelist Jack London. Lewis’ first serious novel, published in 1914, was Our Mr. Wrenn: The Romantic Adventures of a Gentle Man, though he followed up this work with more “potboilers” or books written largely to pay for living expenses. In 1920, Lewis gained great commercial success with Main Street. From that point on, Lewis continued writing successful novels, including Babbitt and Dodsworth. Lewis’ writing culminated with his receipt of the 1930 Nobel Prize in Literature. He was the first American writer to win the award, and his novel Babbitt was given special attention in earning him the Nobel Prize. Lewis continued writing after winning the prize. In his later life, Lewis continued writing though his struggles with alcoholism culminated at his admittance into the Austin Riggs Center, a psychiatric hospital in Massachusetts. Lewis eventually died from his advanced alcoholism at the age of 65 in 1951.

Josephine Weil Meyer was born in about 1893. She was married to Samuel R. Meyer, President of a Chicago clothing manufacturing company. The couple lived in Chicago’s Kenwood neighborhood. According to her daughter, Anne M. Rothschild, Meyer met Lewis at a ball hosted by Chicago investment banker Melvin Lloyd Emerich, sparking a friendship that lasted until Meyer’s death in the late 1920s.

Scope Note
The collection includes eight letters and cards sent by Sinclair Lewis to Josephine Weil Meyer in the early 1920s.

The collection was previously part of the Miscellaneous Manuscripts Collection.
