Historical Note

This collection contains records of material related to the University of Chicago's former Radio and Television Office.

In 1924, the University began to experiment with broadcasting lectures over the radio station WMAQ, operated by the Chicago Daily News. The relationship with WMAQ developed thanks to Henry Justin Smith who came to the University in January 1924 on a year's leave of absence from the Daily News to direct publicity for the University's development campaign. During the first year of the University's connection with WMAQ, the University's radio programming was under the general direction of the Publicity Office and under the immediate supervision of Henry Justin Smith and his assistant Russell Pierce. Radio programs were offered only occasionally.

In the summer of 1925, President Burton appointed a committee to take charge of University broadcasting. The committee consisted of various deans, departmental heads, directors, and faculty. John Van Zant was hired to operate the program full time, and he was replaced by Allen Miller in June 1926. The Radio Committee convened in October 1925. At the Radio Committee's third meeting, an executive committee was appointed consisting of Gordon J. Laing (chair), Percy H. Boynton, Henry Justin Smith, and John Van Zant. When Henry Justin Smith returned to the Daily News in 1926, he was succeeded by Russell Pierce. Smith was eventually replaced on the Radio Committee by the Secretary of the University, Rowland Hayes. The Committee and Allen Miller worked closely with WMAQ's programming director, Judith Waller.

A studio and equipment were installed in Mitchell Tower. Malcolm Romberg was the University's first radio engineer. By 1927, UChicago was broadcasting select classes from wired classrooms, beginning with a course broadcast from Harper Memorial Library on the topic of American Life taught by Professor Percy H. Boynton from the English Department.

Non-educational content was also broadcast in the 1920s. University Chapel services were aired Sundays on WMAQ and WLS. Sports programs were broadcast on any station as long as there was space available in the radio booths or in the press stand. KYW first presented football games in the fall of 1923, WMAQ in 1924, and WWAE in 1930. Blackfriars performances were aired on WMAQ and WWAE. An attempt was made to air Chicago Symphony Orchestra performances in Mandell Hall in 1927, but the University could not afford the Symphony's fees.

Many new educational radio programs were developed by UChicago in the 1930s, including the "University of Chicago Round Table." "Round Table" debuted in February 1931, airing conversations among University scholars about current topics. The program was conceived by faculty member T. V. Smith and WMAQ's Judith Waller and was based on interdisciplinary roundtable discussions occurring in the University's faculty club dining room. The program was broadcast every Sunday on WMAQ. A core group of 15-20 faculty members regularly participated in the program, with three faculty on air each week. As the program grew, political and business leaders were invited. In 1933 it was picked up by NBC, WMAQ's parent company, which broadcast it nationally. The number of stations broadcasting the program peaked at 118 in the early 1950s. "Round Table" was heard throughout the United States for 22 years and earned a Peabody Award in 1941 for Outstanding Educational Program.

The 1940s saw the appointment of a new Radio Director, Sherman H. Dryer. President Robert M. Hutchins appointed a new Advisory Committee on Radio chaired by Ralph A. Beals. In 1946, an official "Board of Radio" was added to the University Statutes. This was a faculty advisory board separate from the Radio Office and was first chaired by Edward H. Levi.

In the 1950s, the Radio Office came under the leadership of George E. Probst. Through a grant from the National Association of Educational Broadcasting, UChicago began broadcasting social science and humanities programming on WFMT in 1953. Edward W. Rosenheim, Jr. was appointed as Executive Secretary of the Radio Office in 1954.

1955 marked an important moment of change for broadcasting at the University of Chicago. NBC ended "Round Table" on June 12, 1955. It was replaced with a segment called "New World" on NBC's "Monitor" radio program on June 19, 1955. The University continued to invest in radio programming and debuted a program on WBBM devoted to religious choral music called "The Sacred Note," in October 1955, in part to rebuff criticism that the University had communist tendencies. The University also began to shift into television broadcasting. In 1955 the Radio Office collaborated with the College's Home Study Department to present Chicago's first television educational course for college credit: Professor Herman Finer's "Government and Human Nature." When WTTW Channel 11 came on air in December 1955, the University of Chicago was an early participant. Its program "The Humanities" was one of the first shows to air on WTTW.

As the Radio Office took on more responsibility for producing television programming for commercial and educational broadcasting outlets in the mid-1950s, it became the Office of Radio and Television. Edward W. Rosenheim, Jr. remained at the helm as Executive Secretary and Lee Wilcox served as Associate Director. The Office coordinated its activities with the Public Relations Department of the Development Office. The Office of Radio and Television produced "educational broadcasting" and Broadcast Office produced "public relations broadcasting." These responsibilities eventually merged under a new Director of Educational Broadcasting. Rosenheim stepped down from his position in September of 1957 and was appointed as chair of the Board of Radio. Alec Sutherland was appointed Director of Educational Broadcasting. Lee Wilcox became Associate Director of Educational Broadcasting.

The University continued to ramp up its television production. In April 1957, "All Things Considered" debuted on WTTW. The program was viewed as a television successor to the "Round Table" and "New World" radio programs. In 1958 Lee Wilcox produced for WBKB (ABC Channel 7) a 13-week television course called "Science 58" that dealt with basic principles of science. Alec Sutherland was also named Director of the nascent Center for Continuing Education in 1959.

The early 1960s brought additional administrative change. The advisory Board of Radio was subsumed by the Board of Adult Education in February 1960. The Board was reestablished in 1965 as the Board of Radio and Television, with Philip Kurland as chair. John B. Buckstaff served as Director of Educational Broadcasting.

The long-running syndicated radio program “From the Midway” began in 1963 as a series of recorded live lectures.

Jonathan Kleinbard was appointed Director of the Radio and Television Office in 1966. Under his leadership, WTTW committed to reviving “Round Table” in 1968 as a television program hosted by UChicago dean and faculty member, Kenneth J. Northcott. Additional tv programming aired on WMAQ-TV, including a children’s program called “Read Me a Story,” and on WGN-TV, including “Charlando” which was aimed at Spanish-speaking communities of Chicago. WLS-TV launched “Perspectives” in September 1968. Another syndicated radio program, “Conversations at Chicago,” began that same year.

In 1969, Nick Aronson was appointed Director of the Office of Radio and Television. The Office moved from the Administration Building to the basement of the Center for Continuing Education adjacent to the Office’s radio studio. The Office of Radio and Television continued to produce “Round Table,” “Perspectives,” “From the Midway,” and “Conversations at Chicago” into the 1970s. It debuted another television program, “Memorandum” on WMAQ-TV in 1970. By 1973, “Round Table” had morphed into a series of specials on WTTW. The University also started “University of Chicago Review of the Arts” on WBBM radio in 1973.

The Board of Radio and Television continued to exist in the 1970s. It was chaired by John G. Cawelti (1971-1975) and by Norval R. Morris (1975-1977). The Office of Radio and Television was officially disbanded in July 1981, and its staff were transferred to the Public Information Office.
