Biographical Note

Amos Alonzo Stagg was born in 1862, in West Orange, New Jersey. He was the fifth child of eight and his father was a laborer and cobbler. Early on Stagg's family instilled moral, religious ethics into his already resilient character. Stagg worked and attended public school until 1883. Following his graduation from high school, Stagg, aged twenty-one, enrolled in post-graduate courses at Philips Exeter Academy in order to prepare for Yale University Entrance exams.

In 1884, Amos Alonzo Stagg entered Yale as a freshman. He intended to study divinity and become a minister. A popular, if not mediocre student, Stagg excelled in numerous sports including baseball and football, sang in the glee club, and was the financial manager of the Yale News. It was Stagg's devotion to athletics, which marked his tenure at Yale. By his senior year in school, Stagg, already a star catcher on the baseball team, joined the football team that provided him with a life-long love of the game and a dedication to amateur sports. In 1889, Stagg enrolled as a full-time student at Yale's Divinity School, but soon left because of his poor ability to preach sermons.

Stagg soon found work in the athletic department at the new International Young Men's Christian Association training school in Springfield, Massachusetts. His success as a football coach at the college earned him great notoriety throughout intercollegiate athletics. At this time his former Yale Divinity School professor, William Rainey Harper, to head up the Department of Physical Culture at the newly formed University of Chicago, contacted Stagg. Stagg's appointment came with full tenure, an assistant professorship and substantial salary, setting a precedent in selections of athletic directors in American universities. Harper and Stagg soon developed a life-long, intimate friendship that had a significant impact in the development of athletics and football at the University of Chicago.

In 1892, Stagg coached and often played in the first football season at the University of Chicago. A "green" team, Stagg's innovative coaching and personal charisma helped earn the new football players success in the field. The early years of the 1890's marked the rise of Stagg's presence not only in athletics, but also within the administration of "Harper's university."

1894 brought in another prosperous season for the "Maroons." The addition of a new field donated by the prosperous Chicago retailer Marshall Field and a series of successful games played in the West Coast against schools like Stanford provided Stagg with a tremendous amount of respect and popularity among the faculty and students. Intercollegiate football gave the university a significant measure of prestige.

It was at this time he met and married Stella Robertson, a young freshman from upstate New York. Their marriage was an extremely happy one and Stella, referred to as Stagg's beloved "assistant coach," often sat in the press stands, offering commentary on the football games. Together they had three children, two of whom followed their father in careers as coaches.

Under President Harper's administration, Coach Stagg enjoyed a tremendous amount of influence in the policies governing intercollegiate athletics and the Department of Physical Culture at the university. Preferential treatment of players, special athletic scholarships and controversial recruiting tactics were supported by the office of the university president. Football generated a lot of revenue for the school and even more enthusiasm from students, faculty and alumni alike.

Coach Stagg's enhanced reputation on campus allowed him a great deal of autonomy in dealing with athletics. Affectionately dubbed the "old man," he was bold and impatient with anyone who challenged his manner of leading the Department of Physical Culture and the football team. National and collegiate reforms of the game, coaching, and recruiting had little impact on Stagg's dynamic. Even the loss of Coach Stagg's long time friend and confidant, William Rainey Harper, did little to diminish his authority. The successive president, Harry Pratt Judson continued to encourage and protect Stagg and the game of football.

During the years of 1906 through 1924, Coach Stagg enjoyed success as an innovator for the game of football. He has been credited with the invention of the modern "bowl" game, the numbered jersey and the use of the forward pass. He was a productive tactician and strategist for football. Not only did Stagg coach several championship seasons; he was also the head athletic trainer for track, baseball, and basketball. From 1906 to 1932, Stagg served as a member of the American Olympic Games Committee. This period also was distinguished by his increasing difficulties with the administration of the University of Chicago.

Following the presidencies of Ernest DeWitt Burton and Max Mason, the "Maroon's" football team showed a decline in the quality of the player and the performance of the game. The university administration sought out more serious and committed students and checked the recruiting tactics of Stagg's department. After the champion season of 1924, Stagg's team went downhill.

The election of Robert Maynard Hutchins in 1929 to the presidency of the University of Chicago marked the end of Stagg's influence on campus. Hutchins' commitment to academics and to the welfare of the student body placed athletics in a lesser position. The reorganization of Stagg's post and the increasing pressures placed upon him to retire left the "old man" with little alternative. Stagg left the University of Chicago in 1933. A few years later, football would be abolished at the school.

Amos Alonzo Stagg took over as athletic director and football coach for the College of the Pacific in California. Coaching well up into his nineties, Stagg continued to enjoy many successful seasons with the football team. He and his beloved wife Stella died in California in 1965.

Scope Note

The Amos Alonzo Stagg Papers covers the period from 1866 until 1964 and consists of correspondence, scrapbooks, notebooks, photographs, ephemera, books and newspaper clippings that illustrate the life and career of the University of Chicago's first football coach and athletic director. The collection has been divided into nine series: I. Correspondence, II. University of Chicago Department of Physical Culture and Athletics, III. Football, IV. Athletics-General, V. Athletic Associations, VI. Post-Chicago Coaching Positions, VII. Biographical, VIII. Scrapbooks, Notebooks, and Photograph Albums, and IX. Books, Journals and Ephemera. The majority of the collection concentrates on Stagg's years at the University of Chicago (1892-1933) and his impact on intercollegiate athletics, amateur sports and education. Each series is then broken down into subseries, which provides a more comprehensive and narrow scope of information according to the nature of the materials in the collection. Series I, consists of Stagg's personal and career oriented correspondence. Series II through VII, are reports, correspondence and newspaper clippings that are organized into the following topics: University of Chicago's Department of Physical Culture, Football, Athletics, Athletic Associations, Post-Chicago Coaching Positions and Biographical. Series VIII includes detailed descriptions of athletic, personal and career scrapbooks, football and athletic notebooks and photo albums that span 1876 until 1956. Series IX also includes detailed inventory of Stagg's collection of books and journals. This series also includes various scrapbooks and loose ephemera that cover Stagg's education, career and personal life and date from 1866 until 1933.

Series VIII: Scrapbooks, Notebooks, and Albums

This series of scrapbooks, notebooks and photo albums covers Amos Alonzo Stagg's career as athletic director, football coach and prominent leader in the world of intercollegiate amateur athletics. Subseries 1, the University of Chicago Athletic Scrapbooks spans Stagg's forty-year career as the first athletic director and football coach for the University. These books consist primarily of newspaper clippings, telegrams, athletic programs, World's Fair and Olympics programs, letters, ticket stubs, and invitations and cover all University of Chicago sporting teams and clubs, including football, baseball, basketball, women's athletics, track and field, swimming and tennis. It also includes articles on the growth of the University of Chicago, the effect of Presidents William Rainey Harper through Robert Maynard Hutchins on athletics, and establishment of athletic buildings at the University of Chicago until 1933. National intercollegiate athletics issues such as the debate over amateurism and professionalism, player recruitment, the impact of war on athletics, training, controversies, amateur athletics leaders, football reforms, the Big Ten, and coverage of the Olympics from 1900 to 1928 are topics also contained within the scrapbooks.

Subseries 2, the College of the Pacific football scrapbooks and Subseries 3, the Personal and Career books focus primarily on Stagg's prominence as a football coach and leader in amateur athletics at American universities. The College of the Pacific series deals primarily with Stagg's career the school's football coach, and includes features on his family, notably his wife, Stella R. Stagg. These books also include the impact of war on football, the decline and abolishment of football at the University of Chicago and the prominence of West Coast football, and Stagg's contributions to the game. The Personal and Career series spans Stagg's profession, starting his collegiate life at Yale and ending with his coaching at Susquehanna University and Stockton Junior College. Both collections of scrapbooks include college memorabilia, awards, career highlights, famous coaches, letters, telegrams, and programs.

Subseries 4, the Pre-Chicago scrapbooks document Stagg's athletic accomplishments as a star baseball pitcher and football player at Yale University and his work as football coach at the Young Men's Christian Association Training School in Springfield Massachusetts. These volumes span Stagg's student years up through his appointment to the newly founded University of Chicago and include several pieces of Yale ephemera such as magazines, remnants of baseball caps, and student examinations. The scrapbooks also provide information on Yale athletics, the development of the "star" athlete, and the function and importance of the YMCA on college campuses. This collection of newspaper articles and memorabilia provides insight into the various Christian leaders and conventions that took place at the turn-of-the-century and their impact on collegiate and amateur athletics.

Subseries 5, the Football Notebooks and subseries 6, the Duplicate Football Notebooks list the numerous plays, formations, diagrams and reports Stagg accumulated over the course of his career to build his football teams. Strategies, team rosters, notes, and letters from colleagues and his sons provide additional information for the generation Stagg's systems of offense and defense.

Subseries 7, the Scouting Reports and University of Chicago Athletic Notebooks and subseries 8, the Miscellaneous Notebooks are separate volumes that document and record the activities of varsity teams. The scouting reports provide information on plays, formations and team strengths and weakness for opposing football teams for the University of Chicago and the College of the Pacific. The University of Chicago Athletic notebooks contains records, team rosters, meet or game results, schedules and notes on varsity and freshman baseball, wrestling, fencing, swimming, basketball, tennis, golf, track and gymnastics teams. Subseries 8, the Miscellaneous Notebooks is a collection that covers varsity letter winners and record holders and notes, letters and newspaper clippings on the career of H.B Conibear, the former University of Chicago athletic trainer and University of Washington Crew coach.

Subseries 9, the Photo Albums provide a pictorial history of Stagg's scholastic, athletic and professional coaching career. The albums begin with 1876 Yale football team photos, and move on to pictures of Stagg at Philips-Exeter Academy, Yale and the YMCA Training School in Springfield, Massachusetts. Some albums highlight Stagg's personal life such as the infancy of his son Amos Alonzo, Jr. and photos of friends and family. However, the majority of the collection is photos of the various athletic teams at the University of Chicago, specifically the teams Stagg coached: football, baseball and track. The last remaining albums show Stagg's coaching career at the College of the Pacific and a luncheon given in his honor after his retirement.
