Historical Note

Yerkes Observatory, located in Williams Bay, Wisconsin, is a facility of the University of Chicago's Department of Astronomy and Astrophysics. The observatory opened in 1897 as the joint creation of three founders: William Rainey Harper, the first president of the University of Chicago; Professor George E. Hale, the observatory's first director; and Charles T. Yerkes, a wealthy Chicago businessman who provided funds for the erection of the observatory building. On the shores of Lake Geneva, this observatory was designed by Henry Ives Cobb, with landscape architecture by John Olmsted.

Yerkes became known in the astronomical community as the home of the last of the great refracting telescopes, a 40-inch instrument first exhibited at the World's Columbian Exposition in 1893. The observatory housed the university's Department of Astronomy and Astrophysics until the 1960s, and was the site of some of the most significant research in modern astronomy and astrophysics.

In 1932, the University of Chicago struck an agreement with the University of Texas to construct an observatory endowed by the Texas banker William Johnson McDonald (1844–1926). Texas at that time had neither the funds nor the faculty for its operation. Under the agreement, the observatory was to be constructed and operated under the direction of Otto Struve, with the understanding that eventually University of Texas would assume complete responsibility for McDonald Observatory. As such, Dr. Struve became the first director of McDonald Observatory. The agreement between University of Chicago and the University of Texas was modified in 1959 as Texas' program in astronomy broadened, and in 1962-1963 the entire operation of McDonald Observatory was placed under the Department of Astronomy at The University of Texas.

Scope Note

This collection contains records of the Office of the Director of Yerkes Observatory, documenting the administrative history of the observatory and the Department of Astronomy and Astrophysics from 1891-1946; the collection also contains editorial and administrative records of Astrophysical Journal.

The bulk of the collection consists of correspondence of the director from 1891-1946, during which time the position was held by George E. Hale, Edwin B. Frost, and Otto Struve. Typical correspondents included faculty, staff and students at Yerkes Observatory; university administrators; and scientists and organizations outside the university.

Series I contains correspondence from 1891-1903. The correspondence is arranged chronologically in increments of several months, then alphabetically by correspondent or subject.

Series II contains records from 1903-1946. This series consists primarily of correspondence, but also includes material such as financial records, publications and reports. This series is arranged chronologically by year, then alphabetically by correspondent or subject. However, correspondence about routine administrative matters is often filed in subheadings under "University of Chicago" at the end of each year's records.

In Series I and Series II, inventories for the years 1891-1931 contain some lists of individuals or subjects found in each folder; these entries represent "notables," and not a complete list of the contents of each folder. The inventory of Series II includes enhanced descriptive detail for records from the years 1932-1946, when Otto Struve served as Director.

Series III, McDonald Observatory, contains Otto Struve's correspondence dealing with the planning, construction, opening and early operation of McDonald Observatory in Texas. This collection is organized alphabetically by correspondent or subject, such as "Hale, George E.", or "Contracts." The majority of this collection consists of correspondence, but notes, blueprints, contracts, drafts, minutes and newspaper clippings can also be found here. Smaller files of material related to McDonald Observatory are found in Series II.
